

Are We So Different?

Hosted by the Science Museum of Virginia January 28 through April 29, 2012

Bring a fresh approach to your company's diversity initiative.

RACE: Are We So Different? provides a unique opportunity to train your staff on diversity-related topics. Whether you are just creating a company-wide program or looking to enhance your existing initiative, giving your employees the opportunity to interact with this exhibit and then participate in a facilitated dialogue offers an enlightening experience.

This exhibition at the Science Museum of Virginia can be a safe environment to explore what we think we know about race and culture, challenge the perceptions we hold, and understand what is grounded in science and what isn't. Augmented with local artifacts and experiences, your employees are free to consider the role that race plays in our community.

Schedule your group for a 90 minute tour of the exhibition, followed by a 90 minute facilitated dialogue. Group dialogue will be led by staff from TMI Consulting. TMI specializes in building inclusive communities and companies by leveraging diversity through creative, engaging dialogues. TMI focuses on practical, experiential learning and the theory that diversity fosters innovation in the workplace. TMI defines diversity as all of the ways people are both similar and different. The "RACE: Are We So Different?" exhibition provides a solid platform for exploring human similarities while respecting and appreciating the differences.
